

Three patients highly increased their reaction behaviour and reactivity so that they could accept jobs on a part-time basis (one year twice a week, one year once a week): A man with MS worked in a workshop for handicapped individuals; an accident victim at his old work place, since he got back his driving ability after trying twice; and a brain tumour patient as well because he got back his driver's license and coordination. A further example is a young man who was unable to speak or "think" and who had been in a wheel chair ever since. Since 2005, due to his mother's patience and help of our individualized therapy, he has been able to communicate with people, to write with help and think logically again.

Also, many other people who attend training with RehaCom programmes, by HASOMED, achieve further progress or maintain their current level of cognitive abilities.

We do notice that the often made statement "This condition is not improvable" is untrue. The pre-condition, though, is to be patient.
